Welcome to the 2017/18 edition of Italian View, our annual publication highlighting the best of prime residential property in Italy. This year we take a look at the many iconic contributions that Italy has given to the world, from renaissance architecture and painting to Vespa's, fashion and design. We also feature a fascinating interview with John McAslan, the award winning British architect who undertook his own restoration project in Tuscany. It is impossible to consider the market this year without mentioning elections, Brexit and currency which have inevitably affected both buyers and sellers sentiment towards their holiday home. However, despite caution, Italy continues to attract interest based on lifestyle factors which remain at the very heart of owning a property here. Certain areas have seen strong interest, and all areas now seem to be at the bottom of any downward curve, with some reporting moderate price rises. It would seem, with plenty of available stock in many parts, that this is the year to find that Italian dream. Knight Frank's Italian desk in London works closely with a strong and established network of agents across Italy providing both local and international coverage, which is in turn supported globally with 418 offices across 60 countries providing an unrivalled access to both buyers and sellers. We do hope you enjoy this year's edition and we look forward to helping you with any aspect of your property needs in Italy.

Siamo lieti di presentarvi l'edizione 2017/18 di Italian View, la nostra pubblicazione annuale che seleziona il meglio delle residenze di prestigio in Italia. Quest'anno diamo uno sguardo ai numerosi contributi d'immagine che l'Italia ha dato al mondo, a cominciare dall'architettura e pittura del Rinascimento per arrivare alla moda, al design e alla Vespa. Proponiamo, inoltre, un'interessante intervista a John McAslan, il pluripremiato architetto britannico che ha intrapreso un proprio progetto di restauro in Toscana. Non è possibile, oggi, guardare al mercato immobiliare senza prendere in considerazione le elezioni, la Brexit e la fluttuazione della valuta, che hanno inevitabilmente influenzato lo stato d'animo sia dei compratori sia dei venditori in merito all'acquisto o alla vendita della loro casa vacanza. Tuttavia, e nonostante una certa cautela, l'Italia continua a suscitare interesse per lo stile di vita che offre e che rimane il motivo principale per possedervi una proprietà. Alcune zone del Paese hanno riscontrato un particolare interesse e generalmente in tutte si segnala un'inversione di tendenza, con una moderata risalita dei prezzi in alcuni casi. Questo potrebbe essere l'anno giusto per realizzare "il sogno italiano", data anche l'ampia offerta di proprietà disponibili sul mercato. La sezione italiana della Knight Frank a Londra lavora a stretto contatto con una consolidata rete di agenti in tutta Italia che, con il supporto di 418 uffici dislocati in 60 paesi, è in grado di fornire una capillare copertura locale e internazionale, nonché di essere accessibile in maniera ineguagliabile a livello globale sia agli acquirenti che ai venditori. Augurandoci di fare cosa gradita con questa pubblicazione, vi offriamo la nostra disponibilità ad assistervi in qualunque esigenza riguardi la vostra proprietà in Italia.

Made in Italy

Think of any field of design, from cars to cathedrals, furniture to fashion, and the names that dominate within it – and the chances are, they are Italian. From Ferrari to Ferragamo, Vespa to Versace, Michelangelo to Missoni – to touch just the tip of the iceberg – it's clear that this is a nation with an eye for world class craftsmanship.

Some Italian names and brands have become so iconic, they transcend their primary purpose. A Vespa is not just a scooter; it spells freedom, glamour and romance, as modelled by Gregory Peck and Audrey Hepburn in Roman Holiday in 1953 before it became quite literally the image of La Dolce Vita when Anita Ekberg buzzed around Rome on one in the film of the same name.

Likewise, a Ferrari is far more than a car. Celebrating its 70th birthday this year, Enzo Ferrari's vision remains the apogee of style, elegance and innovation, mixed with enough macho muscle to keep generations enthralled. Interior designers today still call on the 1960's classics such as the Ferrari Dino when seeking to evoke the essence of cool design for men.

From the catwalk to the kitchen, and from its streets to its race tracks, Italy is synonymous with exquisite design, and certain cities are inextricably linked to their design heritage. Milan is the fashion capital, with its Fashion Week – which turns 60 next year – one of the world's big four along with London, Paris and New York. But Milan is also known for its prestigious Salone del Mobile, the world's biggest furniture fair, which sets the barometer for what's going to be hot in the coming year.

Rome, as the capital, leads the way in all that is iconic about Italian design, from its ancient monuments to cutting edge boutiques. Venice – home to much of the work by Palladio, possibly the most influential figure in the history of architecture – has an aesthetic exquisiteness in a league of its own. And Florence is the cradle of the Renaissance, the period in which Italy invested prolifically in nurturing its talent and gave rise to a golden era of creativity. Among the most famous Florentines, Brunelleschi is considered the world's first modern engineer in the 14th century, Michelangelo is credited with influencing Western art more than any other artist, and of course there is Leonardo da Vinci, the ultimate polymath and 'Renaissance man'.

Today, the different worlds of Italy's globally revered spheres of design are increasingly combining. Fashion houses including Armani and Versace have entered the world of home interiors with their Armani Casa and Versace Home ranges, and several now lend their name to branded residences around the world, with homes and hotel rooms designed by Bulgari, Bottega Veneta, Fendi and Versace.

Some leading Italian luxury car marques are heading in a similar direction, keen to extend their influence in other areas of their consumers' lives. Bugatti, founded by Milan-born Ettore Bugatti, are building high-end villas in Dubai, with glass-walled car parking spaces so owners can admire their wheels from their sofas.

There is also a new furniture collection from Bugatti, called Bugatti Home, as launched last year at Milan's Salone del Mobile. It includes the Cobra chair, designed by Ettore Bugatti's father in 1902 and now made in carbon fibre and painted in Bugatti blue. Or you may prefer to fill your home with sound courtesy of the latest top-of-the-range speakers from Lamborghini or fill your wardrobe with the new clothing collection from Maserati, who have teamed up with the Italian fashion house Ermenegildo Zegna. No kitchen is complete without the hallmarks of great Italian design either, whether it's wall-to-wall Boffi, who recently recruited the Italian designer Piero Lissoni to come up with customisable range for them, or an iconic item by Alessi, who showed us how even kitchen utensils can be desirable when they are designed by famous names, including the singing kettle by Michael Graves and Philippe Starck's juicer. And there are few coffee purists without a Moka Pot – or macchinetta – the 1930's-designed stove-top espresso maker that is a simple, classic antidote to all singing and dancing coffee machines that are too complex to use.

So what makes the Italians so good at design? Is it genius or genetics? Are the Italians born to design – or is it their daily exposure to great art, beauty and culture, as "heirs of the ancient Greek civilisation," as Rosita Missoni, co-founder of the Missoni fashion label puts it, that inspires them from an early age?

This is a country, after all, where even the Italian police wear uniforms designed by Armani. To be immersed in Italian life, with your daily routine playing out among the perfectly preserved ancient cores of its towns and cities, must surely inspire a heightened sense of beauty and design. The country's culture and climate lend themselves to being outdoors, which goes hand in hand with the cultural importance placed on looking good, particularly for the traditional evening passeggiata.

The country's culture and climate lend themselves to being outdoors

Others attribute Italy's design flair to the country's lack of natural resources. Without those sources of wealth to fall back on, the Italians have, over the centuries, had to nurture their creative side in the spirit of self-preservation and use their imagination to create something beautiful from limited materials. By the middle of the 20th century, thanks to globalisation, Italian furniture design was seen as something of a gold standard, its automobile industry was leading the way in stylish innovation and Italian couture was in a class of its own.

The British furniture and lighting designer Tom Dixon thinks Italians' superlative understanding of designing and making things comes from the family nature of many of its businesses, handed down from father to son, with an appreciation of how every aspect works. Certainly one of its greatest names in architecture today, Renzo Piano, says his greatest influence was his father, a builder.

Whatever the secret, one thing is certain; the Italians have lead the way in all sorts of spheres of design for centuries. Nothing is going to change that any time soon.

Interview with John McAslan

By Zoe Dare Hall

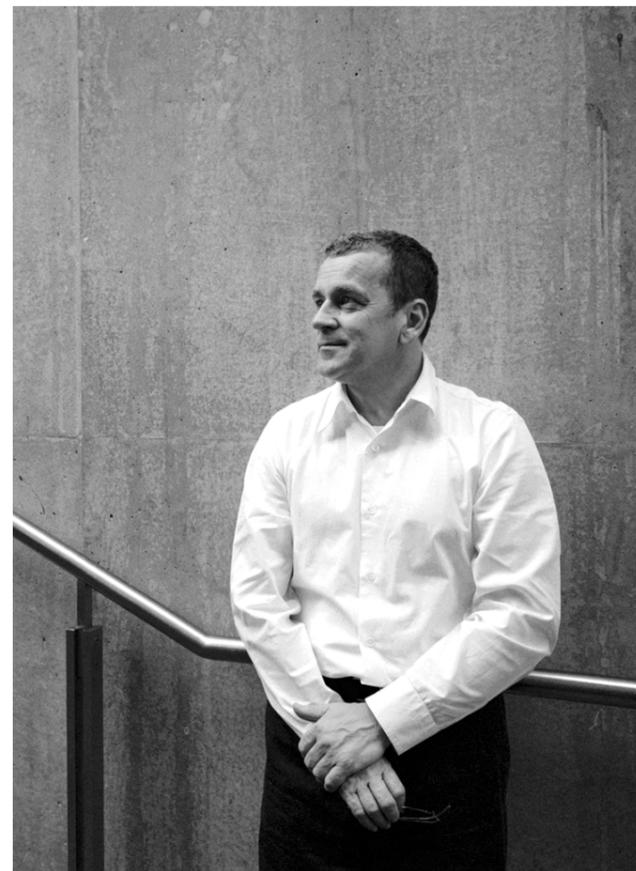

Whenever the leading British architect John McAslan pays one of his frequent visits to his Tuscan home, he tries to take in at least a glimpse of two favourite buildings in the region.

Both are churches and both architecturally iconic in their own way. But while one – the marble-fronted San Miniato al Monte basilica, which perches on one of the highest points in Florence – is considered one of the finest Romanesque structures in Tuscany, the other, Giovanni Michelucci's 1960s-built San Giovanni Battista, overlooking the A11 motorway just outside the city, inspires mixed reactions.

"Every time I go to Florence, I see San Miniato, which is an extraordinarily beautiful early Renaissance church. But another of my favourites is San Giovanni Battista, which was built to honour those who died building the motorway," says McAslan. "It's a concrete building with an oxidised green copper roof and many people regard it as an eyesore, but I think it's a modernist landmark and I love it."

McAslan has won more than 125 international design awards, including three Europa Nostra awards – Europe's prize for cultural heritage – and his practice, John McAslan + Partners, is involved in some of the biggest regeneration schemes in London, including King's Cross station, Camden's Roundhouse and the Natural History Museum, along with dozens of major projects worldwide. So it is little surprise that when it came to building his own Italian holiday home, he veered away from the traditional vision of a rustic farmhouse.

Externally, the recognisably Tuscan aesthetic remains – the stone walls, red tiled roofs and terraces overlooking enfilade running through the house

hills and olive groves. Inside, however, "everything is very elemental and stripped back," he says. "I wanted to make it simple and spartan, to combine my modernism and contemporary architecture. But I also wanted the old and new to sit comfortably, so any new walls had to be as thick as the 18-inch old walls."

He describes a sense of geometry that governs the house's new design. "A key move was to create a 90-foot long enfilade through the house, which is a spatial connector and articulates the great scale of the interior," he says of the 19th century farmhouse, which sits in 65 acres of private woodland near the small town of Castellina in Chianti.

There are polished concrete floors and no skirting boards. "It's quite monastic," he comments. One feature he describes, which he designed uniquely for this house, is doors without frames. "It's sort of urban in its architecture," he explains. "It supports the idea that you can take your urban lifestyle to somewhere gloriously rural. Our homes in London and Italy are basically exactly the same aesthetic. I have art in Italy that used to be on our walls in London and I find that comforting."

McAslan's connection with Italy began in 2005, when he designed the fashion house Max Mara's HQ near Milan. "I worked closely on the project with Max Mara's chairman Luigi Maramotti, an elegant man who had a particularly sophisticated aesthetic appreciation of architecture and the land," he comments.

McAslan and his wife Dava then bought a holiday home in the Tuscan hilltop town of San Gimignano, "but beautiful as it was, the town started to get overrun with tourists and the camper vans stretched down to our mill in the valley," he says. "The house was so low-lying, it was damp and cold in the winter, so we sold it. As soon as I did, I regretted it."

With a new brief that he wanted somewhere elevated that would bask in sunlight from morning until night, he approached Bill Thomson, Chairman of the Knight Frank Italian Network. Together they found a ruin – in fact, three ruined buildings – tucked away among private woodland, with a river running through it, and there began a meticulous restoration project.

"Bill's aesthetic judgements were incredibly important throughout the project. We also worked with a local architect, who knew the planning process impeccably. Then the recession came and we stopped overnight," says McAslan. When it was time to "reboot the project" in 2011, the house had become even more ruinous, he had simplified his original vision and cut his budget. "I didn't have a huge budget and I knew when the pot was empty, that was it. It's our holiday home, not a vanity project."

McAslan plans to spend the summer there with Dava and their three children, who have nicknamed one of the restored outbuildings "the yoga barn". But much as he enjoys soaking up the views from the terrace in the early evening sun, he doesn't plan to sit still for long. "Lounging about isn't my way. I want to work on the land, build walls, and I'm developing a long term master plan for the woodland with the gardener Dan Pearson," he says. "We want to make the land an asset. I think we have an obligation to that land. We can't just sit and look at it."

He also has his sights set on nearby Castellina, "a pretty but not touristic working town", he says. "I'd like to get a redundant industrial building in town back to use, in the same way I did in Glasgow, perhaps as a venue for an arts festival. Once settled, I want to look at what contribution we can make to the area."

He talks about his love of Italian art, from the Renaissance to the Futurists, of Italian industrial design – "whether it's tableware or an Olivetti typewriter" – and of Italian architects such as Carlo Scarpa. "What's lacking is contemporary Italian architecture. There isn't much of it," he says. San Giovanni Battista may not be universally loved, but perhaps McAslan's pared back farmhouse – which he admits is unlike any other – will draw design pilgrims to the Chianti hills.

A scenic view of a colorful village built on a cliffside at dusk. The buildings are densely packed and feature a variety of colors including red, yellow, orange, and white. The village is situated on a steep, rocky cliffside that overlooks a small, rocky cove. The sky is a mix of purple, pink, and blue, indicating the time is either dawn or dusk. The sea is a deep blue, and the overall atmosphere is serene and picturesque. The text "THE FINEST ITALIAN PROPERTIES" is overlaid on the right side of the image in a white, serif font.
